This week our story is about a young girl Chita and her father, Papa. Papa served in the Spanish-American War in Cuba. Chita begs Papa to retell the story of his acts of bravery during the war. This story is a historical fiction story. Historical fiction is a story that is set in the past and portrays events that did happen or could have happened. In some aspects, this story is written like a tall tale because of Papa's exaggerations of his exploits.

Study notes:

In this story, Papa works as a doctor. His daughter Chita likes her special time with Papa because she likes the stories that Papa tells. In the story that Papa tells, Papa is fighting in the Spanish War in Cuba. While Papa tells the story, Chita often interrupts, filling in details, because she has heard this story many times before. As Papa tells the story, he tells of how his colonel did not have enough soldiers and supplies. The colonel asked for a volunteer to go to another camp. Papa volunteers to take a secret letter that is in an oilskin pouch to the other troops. The letter is in an oilskin pouch because the story takes place in a swampy area. The oilskin will keep the letter dry because it is waterproof. Papa convinces the colonel that he is very brave. Papa rides a horse named Majestic. Papa will come across a gigantic snake and alligator that he outsmarts. He will sleep in an eagle's nest. When Papa finally arrives with the letter, the officer in charge reads the letter. The officer then sends more soldiers and supplies to the colonel. The officer in charge tells Papa that he is a brave man. This story could be considered a tall tale because many events in the story are meant to be humorous and have been exaggerated, such as the alligator and snake.
